From the classroom to the laundry

Start with the destination of the item: a child's assigned rest space, the family's clothing bag, or the center's reusable textiles. Then keep the wash frequency and the product's care instructions as two separate decisions. This guide follows that handoff, from identifying a cot to checking one named cot sheet.

The Texas excerpts here concern child-care centers under Chapter 746. The center confirms its current licensing rules and procedures. These selected laundry decisions do not replace that responsibility and do not certify the center or a laundry service. [1] [2] [3] [4] [5] [9]

What is being handed off

The Community Playthings cot sheet and rest-time blanket have machine-wash instructions. Bumkins' waterproof-fabric bib also has its own care instructions. Disposable changing towels and single-service bibs have discard decisions in the cited Texas clauses. The soiled-clothing clause sends clothing home in a sealed plastic bag. These are distinct paths. [2] [3] [4] [6] [7] [8]

The worksheet is only a blank textile handoff. It has no child-name or health-detail field and is not sent to Wash Bodega. Keep child assignment records inside the center's own process, separate from this website and worksheet.

1. Identify the assigned rest space

Section 746.4503(b) calls for the child's name on cots, beds, or mats. It also permits a number with a number/child assignment map available. The number is an alternative with its map, not an unexplained number by itself. [1]

The poster keeps both choices visible. Its instruction identifies the cot, bed, or mat; it is not an instruction to put child identities on a commercial laundry quote. A classroom bagging request and a child's assigned rest space are different records.

For the person taking over

Ask whether the center's existing rest-space identification is complete. If the number alternative is used, the responsible person needs the assignment map available under the cited clause. This guide does not reproduce a map or ask anyone to upload one. [1]

Use the worksheet for a textile group, maker, and care question. Do not copy a child's name, photograph, or assignment map into it. That suggested record helps the next worker identify a sheet without turning a laundry handoff into a child record.

2. Changing cloths have a reuse decision

Section 746.3501 addresses diaper changing. Its cleansing-cloth clause discards disposable towels after use and launders cloths before they are used again. The next clause repeats the discard/launder distinction for a cloth or disposable towel used to dry the child. [2]

That context stays on the poster as Diaper changing. This is not a newly invented wash frequency for every soft classroom towel. The job of a cloth matters; a general towel name does not explain its use.

Keep the question specific

For this handoff, identify whether the item is a disposable changing towel or a reusable changing cloth. Follow the cited discard or before-reuse decision for that item. The guide does not add a chemical concentration, a wash temperature, or a cleaning procedure for the changing surface. [2]

If the center's responsible person needs to resolve another procedure, keep that question in the center's process. The worksheet can hold a textile-care question without naming the child or describing a health event. It is not a report submitted to Wash Bodega.

3. Soiled clothing goes home

Section 746.3505(g) places soiled clothing in a sealed plastic bag to be sent home with the child. The poster states that destination directly. It does not replace the family handoff with an invented center wash cycle. [3]

The clothing-bag decision and the center-linen wash decision are separate clauses. This guide does not turn them into a universal sentence that clothing may never be washed, or a new rule that every item at the center must go into its washer.

Before the family handoff

Use the center's own process to identify the child's clothing and arrange its return. Keep those identity details in that process. The public worksheet has no family-name, child-name, medical, or incident field.

There is no center-sink rinse step on this poster. There is no temperature recipe for soiled clothing in this guide. The decision printed here is the sealed plastic bag and the home destination in the cited Texas clause. The center remains responsible for its complete procedures. [3]

4. Bibs: reusable or single-service

The food-service clause in section 746.3317 calls for washing reusable bibs after each use. The following clause discards single-service bibs after use. Those are different endpoints for two kinds of bib. [4]

The reusable-bib frequency does not supply a shared bleach permission. A named waterproof bib has its own maker care, just as a cotton sheet has its own care. Do not let the word reusable replace the product identity.

A named bib example

Bumkins' waterproof-fabric care excludes bleach and non-chlorine bleach additives. Its bib directions rinse food or craft residue before washing, turn the pocket inside out, attach the hook-and-loop neck closure, and hang dry with the pocket inside out or tumble dry low. They require the fabric fully dry before storage. These are that bib's directions. [8]

The food/craft rinse is not a step for clothing soiled during diaper changing. The clothing decision in the preceding section remains a sealed plastic bag sent home. Keep those two source contexts intact. [3] [8]

5. Linen frequency is not a temperature

Section 746.3407(3) calls for machine washing all linens at least weekly, and when soiled or before another child uses them. The poster keeps the weekly minimum and the additional triggers together. A change of user still matters even if the weekly wash was recent. [5]

This clause gives a frequency and a machine-wash action. It does not print a temperature. A weekly record does not erase a soiling event or a change of user; a product's warm or cold care word does not replace the frequency.

The handoff field

The worksheet gives space for the last linen wash and the next weekly check. Use it as an organizational prompt alongside the center's own procedures. If a linen is soiled or is about to be used by another child, the cited clause is still the decision to read. [5]

This guide does not turn a conditional hot-cycle provision from another section into a universal temperature. It does not copy a hospital cycle onto a daycare sheet. The next section names the product-care examples separately.

6. One cot sheet, one care block

The Community Playthings M167 Cot Sheet says machine wash, tumble dry, and only non-chlorine bleach if needed. The page supplies no wash temperature in that care line. The poster therefore supplies none. [6]

The Community Playthings S15 Rest Time Blanket has a different care line: warm machine wash and low tumble drying. The blanket's warm word does not complete the sheet's missing temperature. [7]

Keep the bib exception beside the sheet

Bumkins' waterproof-fabric bib excludes bleach and non-chlorine bleach additives. The cot sheet's non-chlorine-bleach exception cannot be copied onto that bib. The guide preserves the disagreement rather than making one bleach rule for everything in the room. [6] [8]

On the worksheet, identify the sheet, blanket, or bib and the care information that belongs to it. If the product differs, obtain its own instructions. These examples do not establish one shared cycle for all daycare textiles.

A textile handoff without child records

The blank worksheet has six fields: classroom textile group; piece, maker, and care label; reusable pieces needing wash; last linen wash and next weekly check; separation or classroom bagging request; and a care question for the center's responsible person.

It is not a form on the website and is not submitted to Wash Bodega. Complete a copy on your own device or print it. Keep child names, photographs, assignment maps, health details, and incident descriptions in the center's own authorized records.

Before passing the sheet

- Identify a textile group without a child identity.
- Keep sheet, blanket, and bib care instructions separate.
- Preserve the before-reuse, after-use, and linen-frequency decisions instead of replacing them with one weekly note.
- Leave an unresolved care question for the person responsible for the center's procedures.
- Ask for classroom bagging or separation in a commercial quote; those handling choices are confirmed, not assumed. [9]

These are Wash Bodega planning prompts for the worksheet. They add no licensing certification or new care setting.

Optional Wash Bodega service

The daycare service lists cot sheets, blankets, bibs, and soft classroom towels. Labeling by classroom is a quote item. Tell the team what must stay separated and what can travel in one bag. A listed service item does not acquire a care cycle from another item in this guide. [9]

The center confirms its own licensing rules. Wash Bodega does not interpret or certify childcare licensing and does not claim that the wash satisfies a Texas childcare requirement. [9]

A quote confirms item mix, handling, schedule, and whether pickup fits the account. Wash Bodega publishes no commercial price, minimum, schedule, or service radius. Store customer access is open 24/7; that does not set commercial production hours. There is no dry cleaning, linen rental, or hospital sterilization service. [9]

Read the daycare service page or call (832) 834-5689. The store is at 6604 W Bellfort Ave, Houston, TX 77035. [9]

What this guide does not claim

This guide selects textile handoff decisions. It is not the complete Chapter 746 handbook, a licensing interpretation, a medical protocol, or a disinfection certification. It does not tell the center how to manage illness or replace the center's responsible person.

There is no universal laundry temperature, chemical dose, or bleach permission here. The cot sheet, blanket, and waterproof bib keep their own care words. The diaper-changing cloth decision is not a rule for every classroom towel. The sealed-clothing-bag clause is not rewritten as a broad machine-wash ban. [2] [3] [6] [7] [8]

Child records stay out of this worksheet and website. The poster's QR opens the existing daycare service page. It does not submit a record, certify licensing, reserve production, or promise a commercial return window. Wash Bodega confirms service terms through the quote. [9]
